

Weblogs and the Public Sphere

Comments

You may be interested in this discussion of Habermas, the Internet, and the public sphere: Habermas@discourse.net: Toward a Critical Theory of Cyberspace, available at <http://www.law.miami.edu/~froomkin/discourse/ils.pdf>

The last section contains a short discussion of the possible role of blogs.

Posted by: Michael Froomkin at July 1, 2004 04:10 PM

Andrew, you've said "The growing use of RSS readers may also have a negative impact on involvement in online debate". I disagree: i would suggest that aggregators are an improvement over more traditional methods of conversing online, by improving scope and efficiency.

I've responded to your article in more depth here: Aggregators and public debate.

Enjoyable, thank you. D

Posted by: Drew at July 3, 2004 02:22 AM

Posting Policies

As with any scholarly publication, healthy, robust discussions are encouraged. However, we ask that you refrain from ad hominem attacks and profanity. The editors reserve the right to edit or delete any comment or trackback that violates these rules. In addition, we do not pass emails along to authors.

Comments and essays are the property of their authors. All other content ©Into the Blogosphere 2004.

Contributors agree by posting that any original content, including comments, copyright owned by them, unless otherwise stated, is licensed under the Creative Commons Attribution-NonCommercial-NoDerivs 2.0 license for others to use.